

PART IV

History of the Competition

A. Background

The First Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and Science Competition

The first Patient Counseling Competition developed from an idea into a reality in the span of about two weeks. A sign-up sheet was posted and announcements were made at the beginning of classes. The competition was open to all fourth and fifth year student pharmacists, and eventually 18 students signed up.

At the preliminary round the students were given a simple practice scenario and were required to counsel the patient on appropriate use of the drug involved. Participants were given a prescription and a patient profile, and were allowed five minutes to refer to any of the reference sources available in the PCP&S (now University of the Sciences in Philadelphia) Model Pharmacy. After consulting the references and determining the appropriate information for the patient, the participants were required to counsel the patient. Five minutes were allowed for counseling. Participants were evaluated objectively on the content and style of the counseling presentations. The ten highest scoring participants were invited to participate in the final round.

The final round involved a more complex counseling situation where the participants were again given a prescription and a patient profile and were asked to counsel the patient on effective drug use. The patient in this round displayed a personality characteristic (hurried, unconcerned, anxious, unintelligent, etc.) that required the participant to adjust to the situation. After allowing the participant ten minutes to consult the reference materials, the patient returned to be counseled and exhibited the selected personality characteristic. Ten minutes were allotted to each participant for counseling. Videotapes of each participant were viewed by volunteer community pharmacists who served as judges.

The Second University of the Sciences in Philadelphia Competition

In the spring of 1984 the second Patient Counseling Competition was conducted at the University of the Sciences in Philadelphia. Timing of the competition was planned so that the entire program took place during ten days when no other major activities or exams were scheduled. Publicity was intensified and resulted in 33 participants. A special evening session of the competition was scheduled for students on clerkship.

Expansion to the National Level

Because the competition had been so successful at the University of the Sciences in Philadelphia, a plan for a national patient counseling competition was developed.

This plan was presented to the United States Pharmacopeia who enthusiastically agreed to fund the national program. Coordination of the local and national competition required administrative resources, student participation, and a strong relationship with each college of pharmacy. When approached, the American Pharmaceutical Association Academy of Students of Pharmacy immediately embraced the program and adopted it as an APhA-ASP function.

In 1998, USP announced a realignment of their strategic focus. As a result, APhA assumed full responsibility of the program.
